Unlocking And Flashing

Flashing a cell phone essentially means reprogramming it to work with a carrier other than its intended provider. Unlocking applies to GSM phones, which is the process of obtaining a code that "unlocks" the Sim card slot and allows you to put a different provider's Sim card in place of the original.

Flashing, on the other hand, applies specifically to CDMA phones. For example; Sprint, Verizon, and US Cellular all use CDMA towers. Flashing a CDMA phone reprograms the internal software coding to make the phone think it is for a different provider.

Broken Glass And LCD Repair

If your cell phone's glass has been broken, it may look like a normal glass cracked, and you still may be able to use your device for typing, etc. However, the chances that your device's camera will work are low, but the vital functions such as calling and typing tend to be normal, albeit with minor distortions due to the cracked glass.
